

Medicare launches major payment shift for hip, knee surgery

16 November 2015, by Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar

Medicare is launching a major shift in how it pays for hip and knee replacements. The goal: improve quality and control costs.

The Obama administration said on Monday that starting April 1, hospitals in 67 metropolitan areas will be held responsible for the results of hip and knee replacements, from surgery, through recovery and rehabilitation. The aim is better coordination from start to finish, instead of a piecemeal approach to care.

Hospitals can receive additional financial rewards by meeting certain targets for quality and overall costs. Eventually, they will be financially liable if they fall short.

Hip and knee replacements are the most common inpatient surgery for Medicare recipients. There were about 400,000 such procedures last year, ranging in cost from $16,500 to $33,000 across the nation.

© 2015 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: Medicare launches major payment shift for hip, knee surgery (2015, November 16) retrieved 13 November 2022 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2015-11-medicare-major-payment-shift-hip.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.