

Medical marijuana laws may affect workers' compensation claims

February 5 2020

Credit: CC0 Public Domain

New research published in Health Economics indicates that after US states passed medical marijuana laws, workers' compensation claims declined.

The results indicate that medical marijuana may allow workers to better manage symptoms associated with workplace injuries and illnesses and, in turn, reduce the need for workers' compensation. The reductions in workers' compensation claims after states passed medical marijuana laws were very modest, however.

"The findings suggest additional benefits to expanded access to medical marijuana: increased work capacity and less reliance on social insurance programs among workers," said corresponding author Johanna Catherine Maclean, Ph.D., of Temple University. "Policy makers may wish to consider these benefits when considering medical marijuana regulation."

More information: Keshar M. Ghimire et al, Medical marijuana and workers' compensation claiming, Health Economics (2020). DOI: 10.1002/hec.3992

Provided by Wiley

Citation: Medical marijuana laws may affect workers' compensation claims (2020, February 5) retrieved 19 November 2023 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2020-02-medical-marijuana-laws-affect-workers.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.