

Dutch government holds off on new lockdown measures, for now

27 October 2020, by Mike Corder

People enjoy a beer on an improvised beach terrace during road construction works outside a bar in Amsterdam, Netherlands, Friday, Oct. 23, 2020. Dutch bars and restaurants were closed as of last week as part of a "partial lockdown" announced by Prime Minister Mark Rutte. Shops and bars also have been banned from selling alcohol after 8 p.m. (AP Photo/Peter Dejong)

The Netherlands' current partial lockdown, introduced two weeks ago amid sharply rising coronavirus infections, will likely remain in place until December, the Dutch prime minister and health minister said Tuesday, but they did not announce any new restrictions.

"What we don't want to do is now overshoot while it's not necessary," Prime Minister Mark Rutte said in a nationally televised press conference. "But if it is necessary, we will be prepared to impose further measures."

Rutte said that "all scenarios are on the table and are being evaluated—up to and including a full lockdown" if the current restrictions do not turn the tide of infections.

Two weeks ago, the government ordered all bars and restaurants to close as part of a package of measures. At the time, Rutte said the measures would likely be in place for at least four weeks.

Health Minister Hugo de Jonge said Tuesday that they would likely remain in place into December.

Rutte's comments came after the Dutch public health institute reported that the number of people confirmed to have COVID-19 in the Netherlands rose by 22% to 67,542 over the last week.

The institute said that the growth in positive tests is slowing slightly, likely a result of lockdown measures imposed by the government in recent weeks.

Even so, Dutch hospital intensive care units are so stretched by the surging number of COVID-19 patients that they have begun airlifting patients to German hospitals.

billions of euros the government already has pledged to businesses ranging from national flag carrier KLM to small restaurants.

Among measures in the latest package are contributions to help bars and restaurants and organizers of events such as music festivals and funfairs survive the slump in business caused by government restrictions.

© 2020 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed without permission.

Terrace chairs are stacked outside a bar in the historic center of Amsterdam, Netherlands, Friday, Oct. 23, 2020. Dutch bars and restaurants were closed as of last week as part of a "partial lockdown" announced by Prime Minister Mark Rutte. Shops also have been banned from selling alcohol after 8 p.m. (AP Photo/Peter Dejong)

The percentage of positive tests rose to 17.9% compared to 15.2% a week earlier. Intensive care unit admissions rose by 333, compared to an increase of 287 in the previous week.

The government also announced a new package of support Tuesday for businesses struggling to survive restrictions aimed at reining in the coronavirus pandemic.

The new financial lifelines are worth some 500 millions euros ($590 million). They come on top of

APA citation: Dutch government holds off on new lockdown measures, for now (2020, October 27)
retrieved 1 July 2022 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2020-10-dutch-lockdown.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.