higher for American Indian/Alaska Native people versus other racial/ethnic groups. There was also variation seen in stage at diagnosis, survival, exposure to risk factors, and preventive measures and screening by race/ethnicity, socioeconomic status, and geographic location; for all cancer combined, five-year relative survival was 14 percent lower for residents of poorer versus more affluent counties.

"Despite some progress in recent decades, cancer disparities are still a major issue in the United States, and they may further widen because of increasing costs of novel treatments and advanced medical technologies," Islami said in a statement. "[There is m]uch more work to be done to enhance health equity and mitigate cancer disparities."

Farhad Islami, M.D., Ph.D., from the American Cancer Society in Atlanta, and colleagues provide comprehensive U.S. data on disparities in cancer occurrence, major risk factors, and access to and utilization of preventive measures and screening by sociodemographic characteristics.

The researchers noted that the overall cancer death rate is 19 percent higher for Black versus White males. For females, the overall cancer death rate is 12 percent higher for Blacks versus Whites, despite their having an 8 percent lower incidence rate. For specific cancer types, substantial variations were seen in death rates; for example, kidney cancer death rates by sex were 74 percent
